

Kevin Barry

Kevin Barry moved to Naples in 2017 after relocating from Boston where he had lived for 40 years. He and his wife, Jane, reside here full-time. They have one son, Thomas, who lives in Boston.

Kevin spent his career in magazine publishing, first with The New Yorker before founding his own firm, Madison Publishing, which provided communication services to large managed healthcare companies. He sold that business to the Times Mirror corporation in 1995.

Kevin then joined an early-stage non-profit, Year Up, a jobs training program for low-income urban young adults. It started in Boston in 2002 and now operates in over 27 cities nationwide with an operating budget of over $200 million.

At Champions for Learning, Kevin has been a mentor for two young men beginning in 2019. In addition, he mentors three classes with the Entrepreneurial Program where he serves on the executive committee. Kevin has served on the selection committee for the Take Stock program as well.
